

★ STATEHOOD IS ACHIEVED

PRESIDENT TAFT SIGNS PROCLAMATION ADMITTING ARIZONA INTO THE UNION

At 10:02 Signature of Executive is Affixed While Moving Picture Machines Make an Accurate Record for Future Generations of Historic Event that Makes Continental United States a Completed Sisterhood to Commonwealth.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—To the accompaniment of the whirr of three moving picture machines that faithfully recorded the historic incident and the clicking of a battery of cameras lined along the walls of his executive office, President Taft at 10 o'clock this morning signed the proclamation admitting Arizona into the union as the forty-eighth and probably last state for at least half a century to join the sisterhood of states. The only bit of territory now remaining in the confines of continental United States is the District of Columbia.

After signing a duplicate which will be sent to Arizona, the president looked up with a smile and said, "there you are." He used a gold pen in signing which he later presented to Postmaster General Hitchcock. The room was crowded during the ceremony by all the Arizonaans in Washington, numerous officials and many newspaper men.

After the signing it was announced that Taft will send the nomination of Richard E. Sloan to the senate to be U. S. District Judge in the new state. Taft sent a telegram to Sloan announcing the completion of the statehood preliminaries.

The moving pictures taken today may go into the records of the government to be handed down to future generations. From the time Taft signed the proclamation admitting Arizona to the hour when he took a short stroll through the White House grounds with Mrs. Taft the moving picture men were busy. As a wind-up scene of the executive officers they took an "action picture" of the newspaper men stationed at the president's desk. As the president came to see Taft they were admitted to the president for his approval in a few days.

Proclaims Arizona State.

The proclamation of the admission of Arizona as a state, issued by President Taft, was as follows:

By the president of the United States of America.

Whereas, the congress of the United States did, by an act approved on the twentieth day of June, one thousand, nine hundred and ten, authorize the people of the territory of Arizona to form a constitution and a government, and provide for the admission of such state into the union on an equal footing with the original states, upon certain conditions in said act, specified, and whereas, said people did adopt a constitution and ask admission into the union.

And, whereas, the congress of the United States did pass a joint resolution, which was approved on the twenty-first day of August, one thousand, nine hundred and eleven, for the admission of the state of Arizona into the union, which resolution required that, as a condition precedent to the admission of the said state, the electors of Arizona should, at the time of the holding of the state election as recited in said resolution, vote upon and ratify and adopt an amendment to section one of article eight of their state constitution, which amendment was proposed and set forth at length in said resolution of congress.

And, whereas, it appears from information laid before me that the first general election was held on the twelfth day of December, one thousand, nine hundred and eleven, and that the returns of said election upon said amendment were made and canvassed as in section seven of said resolution of congress provided, and, whereas, it further appears from information laid before me, that a majority of the legal voters cast at said election upon said amendment were in favor thereof, and that the governor of said territory has, by proclamation, declared the said amendment a part of the constitution of the proposed state of Arizona, and, whereas, the governor of Arizona has certified to me the result of said election upon said amendment, and of the said general election.

And, whereas, the conditions imposed by the said act of congress, approved on the twentieth day of January, one thousand, nine hundred and ten, and by the said joint resolution of congress, have been fully complied with.

Now, therefore, I, William Howard Taft, president of the United States of America, do, in accordance with the provisions of the act of congress and the joint resolution of congress herein named, declare and proclaim the fact that the fundamental constitution of the state of Arizona is complete. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this fourteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twelve, and of the independence of the United States of America, the one hundred and thirty-sixth.

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT.
By the President,
HUNTINGTON WILSON,
Acting Secretary of State.

Considering the time in which the details of the demonstration were arranged, the celebration was one of the most successful ever held here. The majority of the stores in the city were closed yesterday afternoon in observance of the day, though the post office, banks and court remained open, the day not having been officially declared a holiday.

Parade Begins Formalities.

The formal ceremonies of the demonstration began with a parade, in two sections at 2 o'clock. At that hour the children of the Loretta academy marched down Tombstone canyon and

STATEHOOD IS PERFECTED BY THE INAUGURATION OF OFFICIALS AT PHOENIX

Governor Takes Oath and Delivers Address Before Great Throng that Cheers First Executive of Forty-eighth State—Business Administration and Democratic Equality are Keynotes of the Inaugural Address—Others Also Installed

PHOENIX, Ariz., Feb. 14.—In the presence of an immense crowd of citizens of the state, many of whom had come from without the city, George W. P. Hunt was inaugurated governor at noon today. In keeping with his expressed wish the ceremony was a simple one. Oath was administered by Alfred Franklin who but an hour previous had taken his oath as chief justice of the supreme court. Following this ceremony a prayer was offered by Reverend Seaborn Crutchfield, after which Governor Hunt delivered his inaugural address. During its delivery he was frequently interrupted by applause. At its conclusion and when he was introduced to the assemblage by Justice Franklin, he was cheered for several minutes. There was every indication that those who were present not only approved of the thoughts expressed by the governor but wished him success in their execution. Then, too, they were cheering their first state governor.

PHOENIX, Ariz., Feb. 14.—With the simplicity that in matters official has come to be designated as "Jeffersonian"—characteristic of that part of the west that was last to be surrendered to civilization by the red man—George W. P. Hunt was inaugurated as the first state governor of Arizona today. A few hours earlier in the day, word had come by telegraph from the national capital that President Taft had signed the proclamation admitting Arizona into the union—the last of the territories on continental soil, and the forty-eighth state of the nation.

The ceremonies attendant upon the birth of this state and the injection into office of its first executive were entirely devoid of pomp and display that usually accompany inaugurations. No uniforms glittering with gold lace were in evidence. The military was conspicuous by its absence, for the new governor is averse to ostentation. There was but a meager display of even the silk hat and the frock coat, which only a few years ago invaded Arizona. It was a simple affair throughout—Phoenix has witnessed much more ceremonious functions.

Walks To the Capitol.

Accompanied by a number of the newly elected state officers and a few close friends, Governor Hunt began his life in Arizona a quarter of a century ago as a waiter in a small mining camp restaurant at Globe walked to the capital building. It is just about a mile from the center of the city out toward Washington street, on either side by unbroken lines of palms to the white stone capitol, which looks out over the city. Others rode in street cars, automobiles, carriages or on horseback to the scene of the inauguration and when the governor and his escort arrived at the capitol grounds were crowded with cheering Arizonaans, joyous in the first flush of complete citizenship. The large majority of them will this year for the first time in their lives cast their votes for a president of the United States.

Oath is Administered.

The inauguration ceremonies were
